Co-Founder

Gionne Marts is fiercely passionate about the restoration of the family and the divine, integral role both mothers and fathers play in the home. She understands that to shift the tide in the African American family, you must address the challenges African American young men face—challenges that affect who they become as fathers and leaders. Her personal experience raising five children has given her a profound perspective on the inner workings of family life, parenting, and generational legacy.

Professionally, Gionne has spent a decade championing students and building supportive structures in education. Her work as a high school administrator included serving as an Academic Counselor for grades 8–11, Dean of Girls, and Student Life Advocate—roles through which she mentored hundreds of students, guided families, and nurtured holistic environments for growth and achievement.

Gionne’s background also includes more than ten years as an Executive Assistant and a longstanding commitment to building systems, strategies, and operational excellence within organizations. Innovation drives her desire to produce impactful results wherever she finds herself.

She serves as Co-Founder of Level the Playing Field Leadership Academy, dedicated to uplifting others and transforming communities through vision-driven leadership.
